Lynchburg, Va., July 15.—Virginians and others formerly habitues of the charming Westover, are renwing their allegiance, and the airy rooms of the old hotel, new the Virginia Christian College, are rapidly filling.

From no point in the vicinity of Lynchburg is there so fair an outlook over the foothills to the remi-horizon of mountains twenty to thirty miles away, stretching in broken quadruple range from east of Amherst to west of Bedford, and ending in the majesty of the old twin peaks.

The hotel here, with its wide verandas, its spacious halls, its cool, large public rooms, is an ideal summer home. It stands in the midst of a shade-dotted lawn and on the edge of a wenty-five-acre oak grove, which loopes to a brisk little stream some of yards helow, its elevation nearly 0.00 feet above the sea.
